Three Killed in Air Crash

Machine Hits Telephone House After Losing Wing.

New York, Nov. 13.-An airplane, flying on a test trip for the International Harvester Company, went down in a hailstorm and crashed into a telephone house. Three lives were lost.

The airship, carrying two men, was sighted by a bystander who rushed to the scene. He found the two men dead, one of them killed instantly and the other with broken bones. The pilot, who was killed in the crash, was identified as John R. MacNeil, a 35-year-old airman, and E. R. Rapp, a 22-year-old engine mechanic.

The airship was a new model, built for the International Harvester Company. It was on its first test flight when it went down in a hailstorm. The pilot was trying to get back to base when the accident occurred.
